This has proved a very bad year for renegade Republicans.

It will probably be a source of satisfaction to General Hancock that he will not have to go to Washington to live, there is so much malaria there.

Carter H. Harrison has taken the premium as the meanest political demagogue the recent campaign has evolved in the United States.—Evening Journal.

But why leave W. H. Barnum out in the cold?

The Indianapolis Journal, in describing Mr. English's feelings after the election very aptly credits him with saying, "I wouldn't have had this happen for 30 cents."

Government bonds took another rise after the Republican victory. On Thursday the 4 per cents were selling for $1.10½, an advance of one per cent since the election of Garfield.

For forty-eight hours the Democrats found comfort in the reports that California and Oregon had gone Democratic. But they are in the valley of disappointment for both States are Republican.

The newspapers are already engaged in making a cabinet for President Garfield. Let them go on with this senseless business. In time they will learn that Garfield will select his own cabinet.

The next Legislature of this State will stand—Senate, 21 Republicans, and 9 Democrats. Assembly, 79 Republicans and 21 Democrats. It will be a lonesome thing to be a Democrat is the Wisconsin Legislature next winter.

The English people don't like the success of the Republican party. They wanted Democracy and free trade for the benefit of the English workingmen. But the motto of the Republican party is "home first, and the world afterwards."

It would be perfectly in keeping with the past conduct of Chairman Parkinson, of the State Democratic committee, to tell the readers of the Madison Democrat that Wisconsin was doubtful, and that Hancock was surely elected. He should issue a private circular to this effect.

Last year there were 23,767 appplications on file in the war department at Washington to enter the regular army. Of this vast number only 5,000 could be accepted. It is said that of those who were rejected, 2,758 were turned from the recruiting stations on account of intemperance.

The manner in which Chairman Barnum counted States for Hancock, reminds one of the fisherman, that Tom Corwin used to speak about. When the fisherman was asked how many fish he had caught, he would say, "When I catch the one I'm after, and two more, I'll have three."

When Emery A. Storrs sent his congratulations from New York to Garfield, he used these words: "Your own course has been wonderfully wise for yourself and comforting to your friends." Every word of this is true. There has never been a candidate for the Presidency who demeaned himself more wisely that General Garfield, and this had its influence in the canvass.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

The campaign in Rock county was admirably managed. There was a great deal of hard work done, and considerable responsibility was thrown upon the shoulders of one man. It is no easy matter to conduct a campaign, even when it comes down to a single county. There are a thousand and one perplexities to contend with, and he who rises above these and succeeds in making a vigorous canvass, wins a victory over which he may feel proud. For the excellent management of the campaign in Rock county a great deal of the credit should be given to Mr. W. T. Vankirk, chairman of the county committee. He has done more solid work than any one who has not been placed in the position of chairman, can possibly imagine. There is no place in a campaign where more desecretion is needed, where industry is more demanded, and where patience is more required, than that of chairman of a county committee. He must engage speakers, give them proper appointments, and become responsible for the general management of the canvass. It is no easy matter to do this and to make the campaign vigorous and harmonious. We believe it is but justice to say publicly, that Mr. Vankirk deserves much credit for the work he has done in the recent campaign. He has worked hard and worked well, and Rock county responds with a larger Republican majority than it has given for a good many years.

There are others who should not be forgotten and who are worthy of special mention. There were over fifty public meeting held in Rock county, among those of the city who responded to the call of Chairman Vankirk, were Senator Richardson, Pliny Norcross, O. H. Fethers, James A. Sutherland, A. H. Baxter, E. M. Hyzer, H. A. Patterson, B. F. Dunwiddie, J. R. Bennett, J. W. Sale, S. J. M. Putnam, Tom S. Nolan, F. N. Hendrix, H. H. Blanchard, Wm. Street, and our friend David F. Sayre, of Porter. These men were enthusiastic in the cause, and sacrificed much in neglecting their private business to work for the success of the party. They are entitled to the thanks of the Republicans of Rock, and we have the assurance that the thanks will be heartily bestowed.

We take it all back sir,
Our lies, the whole pack sir,
Most bitterly we rue it
If we can get forgiven
If there's mercy in Heaven
We never again will do it.

That our great party leaders
Led by those sharp seceders
Should think to win the day,
Seems now almost insane
Since we have heard from Maine
And all the States up this way.

Hendricks said "twas English
Who spoiled the kettle of fish
And dumped them in the fire,"
And Hancock said "twas Barnum,
Miserable Wa-a-cums
'That swamped them in the mire."

Gintlemen, ye're awl mestaken
If my pint is well taken,
'Tis not the one nor tother.
Platform and Gen'ral don't agree,
This for you and that for me
Is what has made the pother.

You tried to look two ways
To gain both blues and grays,
"The Gen'rel fought for the Feds."
Down South they changed the tune
"There's more'n one phase to the moon,
'Tis our'n whether tails or heads."

A voice is heard like sound of doom,
It is the mighty Garfield boom.
The stalwarts still are firm and true,
From sea to sea with swelling notes
Nine million freemen cast their votes
This land belongs to Gray and Blue.

A HACKNEY COACH DRIVER

He Has "Hauled All the Great Actors and Actresses"—His Professional Estimate.

Drifting around in quest of something of interest to the public, a Pittsburg Commercial Gazette reporter dropped into the Union depot of that city. At the entrance ensconced on one of the benches attired in a heavy overcoat he found a hackman who had grown grizzled and gray in the service, and who, as the reporter approached, drew himself up as though he was sitting on the box behind a fast-going span of nags, and snapping his whip with the air of a connoisseur, he said: "Business is getting dull in my line. I don't make the good hauls that I used to. I 'spose, young man, that I have hauled more people of note in that hack of mine out there than all the rest of the hackmen in this town together." "How is that?" queried the reporter. "Well, I have hauled all the great actors and actresses that have come to this city for the past twenty years. Seems to me that the professor is getting to know me, and whenever I see Lawrence Barrett get off the train I says, 'How are you, Mr. Barrett?' and he turns round and recognizes me. Barrett is a good fare and pays double, so he don't forget the hackmen. The last time that he was here I hauled him to the hotel and then to the theatre, and when he got out he felt in his pockets and found he hadn't a cent with him. I says, 'All right, Mr. Barrett,' and he told me to call at the hotel the next day. I went around and he gave me a gold piece. Barrett is generous to us hackmen, and always has a kind word or a joke to pass with us. He is not like old Forrest, who is dead and gone. I hauled him down from the depot once, and my front axle broke at the corner of Grant street. I thought old Forrest would kill me. He jumped out of the hack and stormed and raged and swore like a madman. I tell you he was not a nice customer to handle. Alice Oates, in her palmy days used to be a very dainty customer. She would come out and and look into my coach very carefully before getting in, and was dreadfully afraid that the cushions would soil her dress; then she would look at the horses and rig to see if it was stylish. Within the last few years, however, she has not been near so particular. She has changed a great deal since those early days. Formerly she would come dancing out in a vivacious, sprightly way, that made her look pretty but now when she comes here she walks to my hack with her head down, as slow and demure as a priest. She don't seem to care now whether the cushions soil her dress or not. She always paid me well, and I rate her among my best fares. I suppose you remember when that old Italian, Salvina, was here, Well, he was a curious fare; he couldn't speak English, and when I started for the hotel would rattle on the window and stick his head out looking at the buildings. He stopped me on Smithfield street, and pointed to the smoke overhead; it was rather misty that day, and he did not seem to understand what caused it.

"Fechter was a mighty particular man about driving, and would almost always make me drive slow. When he came here to open the Opera house I hauled him from the depot, and he began rehearsing some part in the hack, and got very much excited. I guess people on the sidewalks who heard him and saw his gestures thought I was hauling a madman. Henry Ward Beecher is a nice fare. I get him every time he comes here to lecture; he always has a kind word and a joke, and never gets mad if I get stuck in a crowd of wagons. He always gives me a pass to his lectures. Theodore Tilton is a cranky sort of a fare and never would say much to me. I tired to draw him out two or three times when I hauled him, but he would always tell me to mind my own business. He always saw that he gave me the right fare and no more. I tell you what it is, taking them all in all, lecturers and professional men make the best fares. I have got so now I can tell as quick as I see my old customers whether times are good with them or not, and while they always pay well, they pay better when they have had a good run of luck.

"I could go over a long list of stars that I have hauled, but those I have given you will do for samples. Clara Louise Kellogg is a curious fare to haul Every time I have hauled her she finds something to scold me about. And one time she had a terrible row with Miss Cary in my hack about something. I tell you I expected to see a hair-pulling match, but they quieted down before we reached the hotel. I see by the papers that Ole Bull is dead. Poor Ole, he was a mighty kind-hearted man. The first time I hauled him I looked a little hard up, and he talked and chatted with me about my business, and gave me a ten-dollar bill. He was a mighty good man so he was.

"Lucille Western was a strange fare. She was always beaming with kindness I hauled her down to the hotel one night, and she told me to wait and take her to the theatre. The front window was open, and she would ask me all sorts of questions about Pittsburgh and its people. After she got her supper she came out to get into the hack, and I noticed she had been drinking. She spoke very kindly to me though, and when she got to the theatre told me to keep my hack at the door for her. I told her all right and was driving away when she called me back and asked me if I wanted to see the play. I told her I could not afford to waste the time, and she said: 'Oh, never mind, I'll pay you double.' She gave me a pass and I went in. She played Leah that night for all there was in the part. When she came to the 'curse scene' she beat her face on the floor. She was very much excited, and I think I will never see a woman play the part as she did that night. Poor Lucille, she didn't live very long after that night."

MAKE IT UNANIMOUS.

A Prominent Southern Democrat Proposes to Make Garfield's Election Unanimous.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—There is a strong conviction among the politicians of both parties that the defeat of Hancock means the breaking up of the Solid South in the future. One of the most popular and prominent Southern Democrats now in the city says: "If I had my way I would cast the 138 electoral votes of the South for Garfield, and make the thing unanimous. Our alliance with the Northern Democrats gives them all the ha'pence and we get all the kicks. We have done all we promised politically, but our Northern party associates have sold us out or betrayed us. The Northern Democrats always consult their interests, and I am in favor now of the South consulting hers." This feeling is not confined to any one, nor to a few of the Southern Democrats, but seems to be general. They say that in the six years the Democrats have had the House they have given the South nothing. That when an appropriation for that section is asked the Northern Democrats say, "For God's sake don't, or you'll ruin us." Hitherto the hope of winning a national victory has sufficed to prevent the natural divisions of Southern Democrats, but now that they see the solid South is always sure to be beaten, and that nothing can be gained by maintaining it, it is believed that they will soon split up.

CALIFORNIA.

The Golden State Wheels into Line in the Republican Column.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4—Additional returns from the interior and more careful tabulation of those before received make a complete change in favor of the Republican ticket in the State. The votes counted give Garfield 69,905; Hancock 67,027; Weaver 2,707. There is no possibility of the votes yet to be counted changing the result, though the majority will probably slightly reduced. It is now definitely settled that the Republicans will have a majority on joint ballot, insuring the election of a Republican Senator. The congressional delegation stands: Page and Pacheco, Republicans; Rosencrans and Berry, Democrats.

OREGON.

Far Off Oregon Also Joins the Garfield Column

PORTLAND, Nov. 4—The latest election news gives a clear Republican majority west of the Cascade mountains of 1,000. This includes the southern counties. In the counties east of the mountains the Democratic majority is not likely to be over 700 and will not exceed 800 at most. Allowing for all possible errors in the estimates for parts of counties not yet reported the Republican majority cannot fall below 300. Most of these figures are based on actual returns. The State is sure for the Republicans though by a majority less than was expected.

NEW YORK.

No Material Change in the Figures from the Empire State.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5, 1 A. M.—There is no change in the vote of New York. Telegrams were received to-night reporting the exact results in a large number of counties, and they do not alter the Tribune's estimate in the State. A majority of 25,000 is indicated, and there seems to be no probability of any particular falling off in this figure.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Returns up to a late hour this evening do not materially change the figures given earlier for this State and city. A close estimate of the majority for the Garfield electors places the figures in close vicinity of 23,000.

WISCONSIN.

The Republican Majorities by Congressional Districts.

MADISON, Nov. 4—The estimated majority for Garfield in this State is at least 5,000 too high. It will not probably exceed 25,000, unless the electoral ticket runs far ahead of the congressional candidates. The following table is indicated by the returns already received:

District.	Rep. majority.
First	5,000
Second	1,500
Third	3,000
Fourth	3,000
Sixth	3,000
Seventh	5,000
Eighth	2,000
Total	22,300
Fifth (Democratic)	1,500
Total	20,800

THE LEGISLATURES.

The State Legislatures of Every Northern State is Republican.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—From a well-informed source the Star this evening has the following dispatch from New York: "Ex-Senator Dorsey, on behalf of the committee, tells me to-day that the Republicans have carried the Legislature of every Northern State, and says that he includes Nevada in the list, because, in the event of the election of Mr. Fair in place of Sharon to the Senate, he will certainly vote with the Republicans. He claims the Senate as Republican by one majority, and Arthur to hold the casting vote."

NEVADA.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nov. 4—Returns come in slowly. The State is close on Electors and Congress. The Legislature is probably Democratic on joint ballot. The Senate is Republican.

THE BOSTON SWINDLE.

BOSTON, Nov. 4—There are fears that the principals in the Woman's Bank swindle will not get their just deserts, owing to a lack of witnesses. The poor dupes have been visited during the past few days and have been led to believe that everything will be all right if they will withdraw their claims from the hands of the attorney, and that they will be paid in full. As a consequence, a large number of books have been withdrawn, and, as all the books with the names of depositors are in the hands of the defense, the prosecution is unable to ascertain how many and who they are. Many of them would rather lose the money they have put in than be brought into prominence, so that the persons officially known to be depositors are those who have notified the police in person. Mrs. Gould, the agent, was bailed out a few days ago by some of her friends giving bonds is $10,000, but Mrs. Howe could not get the $20,000 required for her security. As the two women occupied the same cell, it is surmised that the plan was concocted in prison. It is estimated that the Ladies' Deposit during the past four years received from its victims between $1,000,000 and $3,000,000.

AT MENTOR.

President Hayes Congratulates President Elect Garfield.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 4.—Although the President and President elect of the United States met at Mentor to-day, there was not even a ripple of excitement in that quiet town in connection with the visit of R. B. Hayes to J. A. Garfield, and to a stranger it would have appeared simply as if two friends were exchanging an ordinary cordial greeting. President Hayes left Fremont in his special car, attached to the regular Lake Shore and Michigan Southern train but owning to delays did not arrive at Mentor until 5 o'clock p. m. The General had almost given up expecting them on account of the lateness of the hour, and was at work in his farm shop when they arrived. The distinguished gentlemen shook hands earnestly, and Mr. Hayes extended hearty congratulations to his successor, in which his wife and son joined, also congratulating Mrs. Garfield. After spending a little time in the parlor in conversation, supper was served. After tea there was a brief chat in which the President again congratulated the President-elect, and at 7 o'clock the train bore the guests toward Cleveland.

General Garfield was much gratified at the call and President Hayes expressed himself as equally pleased with the visit.

GARFIELD'S CABINET.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—There is a good deal of senseless and sensational gossip afloat here as to Garfield's cabinet. It is generally conceded that Sherman will remain in the Treasury if he chooses, and that Conkling may oppose this, but that it would make no difference whether he does or not. It is also said that Conkling will be allowed to name a Cabinet officer, and that Don Cameron can have a portfolio if he wants it, although his friends say that his health is such that he will decline to take upon himself these burdens. It is generally understood here that General Logan will be very prominent for a place in the cabinet, with good prospects for selection if he desires. Ben Harrison, it is thought, can have a portfolio, if he wants it. The New York Herald to-day has a two-column dispatch about the cabinet, which has caused a great deal of amusement here. The Herald's slate is as follows: State department, Ben Harrison or General Grant or Don Cameron; Navy, blank; Postoffice, Thomas C. Platt; Interior, General Logan; Attorney General, John F. Wilson or Ben Harrison.

BURGLARY.

GALENA, Nov. 4.—During the temporary absence, at Scales Mound, of Henry Pooley, from his residence near Wingville, Wis., thieves entered the house and burglarized it of $650 in money, which was concealed under a carpet, and watches and chains to the value of $300. No clue to the robbers.

BERNHARDT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Sales of boxes for the Bernhardt season commenced to-day. Stage boxes for the fortnight sold at $300, balcony boxes at $80, and third tier boxes at $48. Bernhardt is recovering from her cold, and attended rehearsal at the Union Theater to-day.

RUNNING DOWN A DEER.

How an Apache Indian runs down a Deer.

When sufficiently near the hunter takes his aim, and, making a slight noise with his foot on the ground, which causes the deer to turn toward him, has a good chance to hit it in the middle of the forehead. But if he misses the mark, or his gun misses fire, then the fun begins in earnest, and one of the finest races in the world can be witnessed—a naked Indian and a frightened deer at full speed. If the deer should happen to be not more than a year old, it is of no use following it, as it will then outrun any Indian, and run longer without giving out, but if two or three years old, or older, a good runner will bring it down in a few hours, or certainly within fifty or sixty miles. (The narrator, Jose Mendivil, here insists that a good runner among the Apaches can run one hundred and twenty-five miles in twenty-four hours easily.) The deer starts at full speed, making long leaps of from ten to thirty feet. At first he gains rapidly on the Indian, but the latter follows, every now and then uttering frightful yells, but never for a moment halting or losing the trail. The deer, when out of sight, halts and looks back, but soon his pursuer comes in sight, when he bounds on with longer leaps than at first; finally he makes for water, a spring or stream, and when he gets there halts and drinks all he wants. Now there is no hope for him, for after he drinks he cannot run so fast or leap so far. Pretty soon the Indian comes in sight again, while the tired deer rests a moment, but the tired hunter never halts to drink, not if his mouth is as dry as ashes, for by so doing he not only looses time, but cannot run so fast afterward. On he goes, never resting, either on the hill or on the mountain. If the deer takes to the top of the highest mountain, right on his track the Apache follows. By and by the Indian sees a blood stain on a rock, where the deer has stumbled and skinned his knee or struck his nose. He knows now the race will soon be ended, and runs faster than at first, while the deer loses ground every minute. When the deer sees the Apache close upon him he stops suddenly by a rock or bush, and turns. Sometimes as soon as he stops he drops down fainting, or even dead from fatigue. If not dead already, when the Indian seizes him by the head and hind legs, he makes but little resistance, and is dispatched with the knife. The hunter now cuts out a fine piece and eats it, taking not a moment's rest for fear of getting stiff, but puts the deer on his shoulders, or, if too heavy, a part of it, placing the rest in a secure place, and then trots back to his camp, having traveled perhaps a hundred miles without resting. The next day some one will take his back-track for the balance of the game.—San Francisco Post.

Advice to a Young Man.

My son, if you have fallen into the custom of the land this January, and "sawed off" on all your bad habits; if you have "dropped on" all manner of fermented or distilled conviviality; if you have made up your mind that you will be a good boy this year, and pay less for billiards and more for pew rent, and that you won't have any but "honest" headaches; if you have determined to cultivate a taste for good reading and elevated conversation, and a hatred for shady stories and peep-o'-day parties—you can do it in the simplest and easiest way in the world. There is nothing complicated or intricate or difficult about it. To paraphrase Horace Greeley, the way to do it is to do it. Don't "swear off," my son. That won't help you a bit, and you will want to break your oath every time you think of it—and all the time you don't think of it. Don't rush out with public and private and social confessions. Don't pride yourself on your reformation—because the world is so full of better men that you don't count for a cipher on the right hand of the decimal. But just simply quit. Just stop it. Just be honest with yourself, and then you will be honest with the world. And when you get to be honest with yourself, my son, you will be surprised to find what a good fellow you are. You will like yourself. You will want to shake hands with yourself and pat yourself on the back, and call yourself "old boy" and be on familiar, friendly, "Tom and Bill" terms with yourself. But so long as you are not fair and candid and honest with yourself, so long as you make a promise on the first of January, and break it on the second, you will hate yourself, you will be ashamed of yourself, you will seek any society to avoid the rebuke of your own presence. So, be good to yourself, my boy. Be honest with yourself, and if you made any promises on the first of January, stick to them if you have to go out of society and live in a cave. Keep them, if you break a trace a hundred times a day. Be honest with yourself, and by the middle of June you and your conscience will be so satisfied with each other, that you will want to run yourself for President.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Handsome Billy.

Wellsville, Alleghany County, N. Y., lately developed a rural romance out of the usual way. William Freeman had worked as a boy several years for farmers in the vicinity of Wellsville. He was a good boy, and the people called him "Handsome Billy," on account of his fine face. He finally rented a small farm, engaged a widow as housekeeper and her nephew as a farm hand. There were several burglaries and robberies in Wellsville, and some of the goods stolen were found in Freeman's house. He stoutly denied the robberies, but the grand jury found a bill of indictment; at the trial he pleaded guilty, and was sent to the Penitentiary for 18 months. But after all the people of Wellsville did not believe that Freeman did the crime to which he pleaded guilty and for which he was suffering imprisonment. The actions of his housekeeper's nephew had opened their eyes, and Gov. Robinson was appealed to for a pardon, which was finally granted, and William Freeman was set free. He immediately disappeared, and there came to Wellsville a handsome woman, who knew all the people very well, although they did not at first know her. It was "Handsome Billy" in petticoats, and she now introduced herself as Mary Ann Shafer. She gave her history previous to her appearing among them as a boy. She was the daughter of German immigrants; her father died soon after they landed; her mother married again; her step-father would not support her, and at 11 years of age she donned a boy's suit and left home to seek her fortune. She was then 23—and for twelve years she had concealed her sex, and run on canal boats and worked on farms for a livelihood. In regard to the robberies, for which she was sent to prison, she said they were committed by the housekeeper's nephew, who visited her in jail and declared that if she did not plead guilty he would kill her, and she believed he would carry out his threat, and that the safest place for her was the penitentiary. That was the cause of her pleading. When she was pardoned and released she thought the safest refuge would be her own proper woman's apparel. And she made as pretty a woman as "Handsome Billy" had been a boy. The Wellsville merchant, whose store she was charged with robbing, and who had been the cause of her wrongful imprisonment, made her all the reparation in his power. He met her, apologized, loved, proposed and married her.

A Funeral Episode.

Not many weeks ago, at a smart little town in Jefferson County, a poor old lady died. The few relatives she had were unable to do the fair thing toward laying her away in the tomb, so the citizens chipped in to bear the expense of burial. One offered carriages, another a coffin, another something else, and several volunteered to dig the grave. The day of the funeral arrived, and the rain poured in torrents, but a goodly number followed the remains of the fine old lady to the cemetery. Arriving at the grave the crowd was astonished.

Uncle Seeley had only got it half dug, and had gone off and left it, with the rough box standing up on end. Here was a predicament. Every body looked at every body else, between the raindrops. Finally all eyes turned upon Jim Flint, a good-natured man as ever lived. He was dressed up in his best, but but there was nothing mean about him. He pulled off his best coat, handed it to Hoard, the editor, tucked his pants in his boots, grabbed a shovel and jumped into the grave and began to work. For half an hour he worked and steamed, and got wet, and he never looked up. There was not a dry rag on him.

When it was done he looked around at the crowd. Some were under trees out of the wet, others were under umbrellas, and the volunteer mourners, all friends of Flint's, sitting on adjacent graves, with umbrellas over them, as comfortable as possible. Jim Flint looked at the crowd, leaned upon the shovel, wiped the perspiration from his forehead, on his shirtsleeve, and said:

"I have only one remark to make. The next funeral I attend, hanged if I don't go as a mourner."

Then he got out of the grave, the funeral went on, and the followers went back to town looking for Uncle Seeley.—Peck's Milwaukee Sun.

Mad as a Hatter.

A neat story—or rather two neat stories—about Eugene Labiche, the French dramatic author, and hats:

Once upon a time he had been invited to submit a play to a theater on the left bank of the Seine, of which, by the way, the manager was a hatter. The manager had summoned to his assistance several excellent friends who, like him, were interested in the theater and the hat manufacture.

The author placed his hat on the table, took out his manuscript, and began to read.

Presently one of the critics took up the hat, weighed it critically, examined the lining, held it at a little distance, and cocked his head at it in a connoisseurish manner, and, this exhaustive scrutiny having been concluded, passed it to a second critic, who went through a similar performance, and handed it to a third. And thus the hat went round the committee, to the owner's amazement.

But the mystery was cleared up when the manager, after examining the head-covering, said:

"I am sorry, M. Labiche, but we will not trouble you to begin the second act The audiences on this side of the water are peculiar, you know—you don't seem quite to have caught the spirit of the locality."

M. Labiche's hat had been made on the right side of the Seine—which was the wrong side. They did not like his tile.

In another play of Labiche's there was a hat scene, where the owner of a lost chapeau was to be recognized by the name in it, which was to be solemnly pronounced at the crisis of the performance. Labiche saw a happy opportunity to pay off his hatter's bill for a year by introducing the hatter's name and giving him a box for the first performance. Unhappily, he had counted without his host—that is to say, his collaborateur—who also had a hatter and a hatter's bill, and eagerly embraced the opportunity of paying off the latter by putting the former, so, when curtain drew up, there were the hatters of the two authors in opposite boxes, each wondering what the other was doing there, but none the less pleased that his rival should be present at his triumph.

The critical moment came—the hat was picked up—the actor read out the hatter's name.

It was another hatter's name

The actor had a hatter and a hatter's bill of his own.—New York Herald.

Enough was accomplished at the public exhibition of the audiphone in this city, November 21, to show that we have in it an extremely promising aid to those afflicted with defective hearing. It is quite possible, too, that it is the leader in a line of invention which will ultimately enable the mute to speak as well as the deaf to hear.

The instrument is simply a thin plate of vulcanized rubber shaped like a Japanese fan. When in use it is curved to give it the requisite tension, by means of cords attached to the outer edge of the fan and fastened at the junction of the handle. When the top of the fan is placed against the upper teeth the impinging sound waves create a sensible vibration which is conveyed through the teeth and the bones of the face (or possibly by the dental nerves) to the auditory nerve. With a little practice the sounds thus received are interpreted the same as if they reached the nerves of hearing through the ear; and thus the deaf are made to hear more or less distinctly, provided, of course, that the auditory nerve itself is not defective. Experiments are being made with a class of deaf-mutes to determine whether such unfortunes can be taught to speak by the use of this invention, a result strongly indicated by the results thus far obtained. In any case the audiphone seems to mark a decided advance upon the old-fashioned ear-trumpet.—Scientific American.

It is related that Gen. Scott's famous letter to Zachary Taylor, announcing the withdrawal of most of the regular troops from Taylor's command to be placed under his own in a projected movement from Vera Cruz toward the capital of Mexico, was received while Gen. Taylor was at supper with his staff near Monterey. The General asked Col. Bliss to read it to him. He had just replenished his coffee cup, and was engaged in cooling it with a spoon while the reading went on. This appeared to make no further impression upon him than that indicated by a contemptuous "sniff," but as the real import of the letter began to appear, his whole manner changed, and he abstractedly dipped his spoon in a bowl of mustard which sat on the table, and stirred it in the coffee.

This he continued until by the time the letter was finished the contents of the mustard bowl were exhausted. Without saying a word, and to Bliss's astonishment and horror, he raised the cup to his lips and gulped down the abominable compound. He then broke into an excited and profane harangue, consigning to everlasting damnation every one concerned in the depletion of his forces, and only ceasing when his speech was overtaken with a paroxysm of stuttering, which with him usually followed an outbreak of temper. Gen. Pleasonton, who commanded the General's escort in Mexico, says that when once aroused he was the maddest man he ever saw.

That was a clever boy, who said that he liked a good rainy day, "too rainy to go to school, and just rainy enough to go fishing." They were clever Chemists who discovered and compounded Spring Blossom, Sovereign cure for Dyspepsia and derangement of the Stomach.

—Ficinus prepares pure tartaric acid in this way: The crude tartar is saturated with calcium carbonate; the calcium salt is then digested with zinc chloride, and the resulting zinc tartrate is treated with sulphureted hydrogen. After filtration and evaporation, the product is pure tartaric acid.

PETER GOELET, who died in New York recently worth $20,000,000, had an appointment one day to meet a friend in a bank, of which he was a director. The friend being tardy in putting in an appearance, Peter walked into the bank parlor and improved his time by taking off his coat and darning some worn-out spots.

AT Priest's Hotel, on the road from Calaveras Grove to the Yosemite, Cal., is a dog who one hour before the arrival of the stage goes leisurely down the road to meet it, then bounds back to the poultry yard, catches chicken, chops their heads off, and takes them to the cook. He takes one chicken for each gentleman in the stage, never making a mistake.

AMONG the many productions of California's fertile soil, the olive promises to be one of the most valuable. An intelligent Italian, who has been familiar with the culture from his infancy, says that, eventually, the California olive will surpass the best produced in France or Spain. It is now larger and of a better flavor, and yields an oil equal to the imported article.

—What farmers need is not a large domain in order to obtain the largest profits, but they should aim to do everything in the best manner. Improved machinery, clear fields, clean cultivation, improved seeds, the best animals and a constant aim at advanced husbandry promise much for the country in future; and agricultural literature and State fairs will be potent agents, as they have already been, for carrying on this improvement.—Lansing Republican.

FARMERS who do not make gilt-edged butter and do not al ways find a ready, remunerative market for the same, may keep it for a rise in the price by packing the same in sweet tubs or stone jars and covering it with strong brine, or by making it into rolls which are done up in cloth and kept in a barrel of brine; but in this case it must be borne in mind that unless the brine is fully saturated with salt, it will draw the salt from the butter and so injure it; or, again, unless the whole is perfectly submerged, it is liable to become tainted and extend to the brine, and thus eventually injure the whole.

—Methodism is now represented in Burmah. For many years the Baptists were the only occupants of this great field. Some time ago the Methodist Society for the Propagation of the Gospel joined the Baptists there. The Rev. R. E. Carter is the Methodist missionary, and has established himself in Rangoon. The Baptists placed their chapel at his disposal, and a series of meetings were held, at which several conversions took place. Dr. Thoburn and Mr. Goodwin, from India, assisted, and at the end of their visit of two weeks a church of fifty members and probationers was organized and ground for a church building secured.

A DIAMOND smuggler, who was well known to be engaged in defrauding the revenue, for a long time could not be caught in the act. He never left a ship—and he was constantly going back and forth—without being searched in his person as well as his baggage, and he used to twit the officers on their disability to catch him. At last his trick was discovered. He hid the diamonds in the joiner-work of his state-room, inserting them in small holes, which were then filled up and painted over. He engaged the same state-room for a voyage back, and just before sailing from New York he took out the diamonds and gave them to his wife, who came to see him off

YOUNG smokers experience many misfortunes when they begin the use of the weed. They are continually propounding to themselves the following queries: Why can that sickly looking little Jim Fiddler smoke a cigar without being sick? Why does the smoke all rush up your nose when you leave your cigar in your mouth and hunt for your handkerchief? Why do you have such pleasant fancies during the first half of the cigar? Why do you feel as if you would like to crawl out through the top of your head during the last half? Why can't the same weed that makes you so sick at the stomach, without your swallowing it, be utilized as horse power to throw up a quarry? Young America pauses for a reply.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—When Bismarck made his first visit on a diplomatic mission to Vienna, in 1852, there was not so much attention paid to him as on his recent appearance in that city. A Vienna journal recalls that he was then wholly unknown to the world, and only plain Herr von Bismarck Schoenhausen, his present rank being a late acquisition, and that his royal master, the King of Prussia, to secure consideration for him, deemed it necessary to address a special letter to Kaiser Franz Joseph, saying: "I confide the honorable mission to your Majesty to my representative in the German Federal Parliament, Herr von Bismarck Schoenhausen, whose family, one of the oldest, has almost a longer pedigree than mine, and whose ancestors rivaled the Hohenzollerns in bravery and military exploits." This letter sufficed to put the obscure diplomat on a friendly footing with the haughty Austrian aristocracy.

THE Chinese Encyclopædia, to which the famed Britannica is a primer, has just been completed under the imperial sanction, and may be had at any of the book-stores complete for a matter of $7,500. It consists of 5,020 volumes and is dirt cheap. Works of this character are by no means new in the Chinese Empire, and people who form their estimate of the intelligence and culture of its people by the specimens found in America misjudge a race that, though not as progressive as the western peoples, are yet ingenious and curious. In the geography and topography of the immense empire its scholars are marvelously well informed, even to the minutest particulars, and no inconsiderable portion of the cyclopædia is devoted to information of this kind, with which Chinese are expected to be reasonably familiar. The Chinese have always been book-makers, and claim to have invented the art of printing long before it was known in Europe.

DR. PRICE'S REPUTATION!

Has been acquired by candid, honest dealing and years of successful practice.

My practice, not one of experiment, but founded on the laws of Nature, with years of experience and evidence to sustain it, does not tear down, make sick to make well; no harsh treatment, no trifling, no flattering. We know the cause and the remedy needed; no guess work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of Chronic Diseases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. Candid in our opinions, reasonable in our charges, claim not to know everything or cure everybody, but do lay claim to reason and common sense. We invite the sick, no matter what their ailment, to call and investigate before they abandon hope, make interrogations and decide for yourselves; it will cost nothing as consultation is free. MISCELLANEOUS.

A DISCOVERY BY ACCIDENT,

which supplies a want men of eminent ability have devoted years of study and experiment to find—a specific for diseases of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urinary Organs and Nervous System—and from the time of its discovery has rapidly increased in favor, gaining the approval and confidence of medical men and those who have used it; it has become a favorite with all classes and wherever introduced has superseded all other treatments.

DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS

are the most prevalent, dangerous and fatal affections that afflict mankind, and so varied and insidious in their character, that persons often suffer for a long time before knowing what ails them. The most characteristic symptoms are gradual wasting away of the whole body, pain in the back, side or loins; a weak, feeble, exhausted feeling; loss of appetite and dread of exercise; scanty and painful discharge of variously colored urine; inability to retain or expel the urine; minute shreds or casts in the urine; and, when the disease is of long duration, there is much emaciation and general nervous prostration.

THE ONLY CURE.

We say positively, and without fear of contradiction, that DAY'S KIDNEY PAD is the first and only infallible cure for every form of Kidney disease. It is the best remedy yet discovered for this complaint, and more effectual in its operation than any other treatment. By using faithfully and persistently no case will be found so inveterate as not to yield to its powerful remedial virtues.

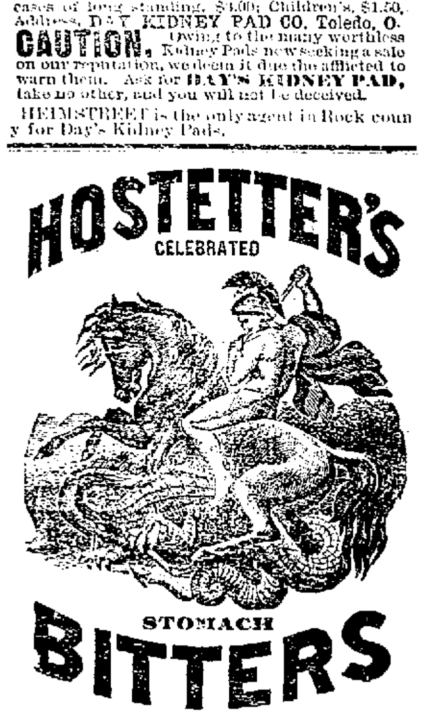
IS STRONGLY ENDORSED.

We have the most unequivocal testimony to its curative powers from many persons of high character, intelligence and responsibility. Our book, "How a Life was Saved," giving the history of this new discovery, and a large record of most remarkable cures, sent free. Write for it.

DAY'S KIDNEY PADS are sold by druggists, or will be sent by mail (free of postage) on receipt of their price: Regular, $2.00; Special, for obstinate cases of long standing, $3.00; Children's, $1.50. Address, DAY KIDNEY PAD CO. Toledo, O.

CAUTION. Owing to the many worthless Kidney Pads now seeking a sale on our reputation, we deem it due the afflicted to warn them. Ask for DAY'S KIDNEY PAD, take no other, and you will not be deceived.

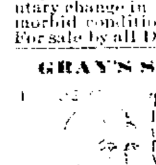
HEIMSTREET is the only agent in Rock county for Day's Kidney Pads.



Meets the requirements of the rational medical philosophy which at present prevails. It is a perfectly pure vegetable remedy, embracing the three important properties of a preventive, a tonic, and an alterative. It fortifies the body against disease, invigorates and re-vitalizes the torpid stomach and liver, and effects a most salutary change in the entire system, when in a morbid condition.

For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

GRAY'S SPECIFIC MEDICINE



The Great English Remedy, an unfailing cure for Seminal Weakness, &c., and all Diseases that follow as a sequence of Self Abuse: Particulars in pamphlet. The specific is sold by all druggists at $1 per package, or six packages for $5, or will be sent free by mail on receipt of the money by addressing

H. A. PATTERSON, P. M.

A Night Among Other Worlds.

Whoever reads good old Thomas Dick's description of his astronomical observatory on the top of his house in Scotland, commanding a view of forty miles of hill and valley scenery along the Tay, must feel a desire to follow the author in his studies of the stars. And, indeed, the amount of instruction and amusement a small astronomical telescope is capable of affording cannot be appreciated by the man who never owned one. Some of the most famous telescopes in existence are owned by English amateurs, and most charming descriptive books on astronomy have been written by Englishmen who do not pretend to be professional astronomers. In this country we not only have purer skies than those of England, and a more favorable situation in latitude, but some of our opticians have astonished the scientific men of Europe by their achievements in telescope making. Yet the number of Americans who own and use telescopes, outside of the observatories, is comparatively small.

Among the first objects that the amateur who has become the possessor of an astronomical telescope turns to are the planets, the earth's brother and sister worlds. Although it is beyond expectation that any telescope will ever be constructed powerful enough to show us the possible inhabitants of any of the planets, yet every increase of telescopic power reveals new features, and such a discovery as that of the existence of continents, oceans and snow fields in Mars—the correctness of which may be tested by any one who has a good telescope of three or four inches aperture—is enough to stir the imagination of the most indifferent.

The first of the planets that the young telescopist tries, and, with the possible exception of Venus, the best known of them is Jupiter, the giant of the family. To the unassisted eye this planet, which is 1,300 times as bulky as the earth, appears as a very bright star of a slightly yellowish hue, and of a pretty steady light. His four moons can be seen with a first-rate spy-glass, but not to advantage. To see Jupiter and his moons well, a power of not less than fifty diameters should be employed on a three-inch telescope. Such a power gives a beautiful view of the planet and the four satellites, all in one field. The difference in the size and color of the moons can be perceived with careful watching, and the startling phenomenon of the sudden extinguishment of the moons as they pass into the great conical shadow the planet throws out into space behind him is distinctly seen. When magnified fifty times, by which is meant fifty diameters, or 2,500 times superficially. Jupiter appears larger than the full moon does to the naked eye. The famous belts can be seen with such a power, but to reveal their details a power of at least 150 or 200 should be used. Then the two great equatorial belts may be seen, stretching with broken edges and many rifts across the disk; and the narrower belts and zones of shade near the poles, the regions of varying colors, and any large spots that may be present, are clearly revealed. The most beautiful phenomena, however, are the transits of the moons and their shadows across the broad, yellow disk of the planet. These are of frequent occurrence, and can be well seen with a three-inch glass of good construction. Every time that one of the moons in its circuit about the planet comes between the sun and Jupiter its shadow can be seen upon the disk like a round ink spot. If the telescope is a fine one and the air steady, the moon itself may be seen against the bright background of the disk. In certain situations the shadow of the moon is thrown forward, so that it may be clearly seen far advanced upon the disk while the moon is yet shining against the clear sky. Hundreds of other interesting observations may be made upon this planet with small telescopes.

Saturn is, if possible, even more interesting as a telescopic object than Jupiter. His vast rings are unlike any other known object in the heavens. When the observer for the first time turns his telescope upon the dull, medium-sized star, for such Saturn appears to be to the naked eye, and beholds a golden ball suspended in the sky and circled by two broad, concentric rings that, it is easily seen, are completely separated both from the planet and from each other, he cannot repress an exclamation of astonishment. The pictures of this wonderful planet in books of astronomy give no adequate idea of his marvelous beauty when viewed through a good telescope. A power of fifty diameters will just show the existence of the rings, but powers of 250 to 400 are needed to bring out clearly all the wonderful details of the scene. The strange dark, or gauze, ring within the two bright ones is not easily seen with small telescopes. In a good three-inch glass the black shadow of the ball is plainly seen upon the rings back of the planet, and close inspection reveals the narrow line of shade that the rings cast upon the ball. There are delicate markings on the planet that form a test both of the powers of the telescope and of the eye. Saturn has eight moons, and very beautiful they look, thronging like golden bees about the rings. Only five can be seen with a good three and a half or four inch glass, but Titan, their chief, which is nearly as large as the planet Mars, can be seen with a much smaller glass. For the next four or five years the rings will slowly open wider, and their beauty will increase month by month.

Venus, which shines as the most brilliant star in the heavens, is a splendid telescopic object. The orbit of Venus, unlike that of Jupiter and Saturn, is within that of the earth, and consequently she is never seen except in the West after sunset, or in the East before sunrise. When nearly between the sun and the earth Venus is often so bright as to be visible at noonday. Then a power of twenty-five diameters shows the planet in the form of a beautiful crescent of dazzling whiteness. With higher powers she may be made to look many times larger, and more brilliant than the crescent moon. As she circles through her orbit Venus presents in succession all the phases of the moon. She is, however, so dazzling that the best telescopes are baffled in the attempt to study her features. Schroter, a famous German observer, thought he had discovered mountains in Venus nearly thirty miles high. Astronomers are generally agreed that Venus closely resembles the earth in physical condition, enjoying the same change of seasons, with considerably brighter sunshine, and that if, as seems highly probable, she is inhabited, the inhabitants are very like ourselves.

Mercury, which is yet nearer the sun than Venus is, on that account, difficult to find except at certain favorable periods. He shows the same phases as Venus on a smaller scale. Very high mountains, it is believed, have also been seen in Mercury. If he has inhabitants it has been conjectured that, on account of their proximity to the sun, they must possess the heat-enduring powers of salamanders.

Mars, which is the next planet outside the earth, is, in some respects, the most interesting of all. It does not require a very large telescope to show the continents and oceans that variegate his surface and the patches of snow about his poles which wax and wane with the seasons. With the aid of a map of Mars the possessor of a good telescope may spend many hours in the delightful task of locating the lands and seas of this distant planet, which it does not require a great stretch of the imagination to picture dotted with cities and fleets. It should be said that some astronomers, arguing from Mars's planetary age, say that his inhabitants, if any are left, must be beings inferior to ourselves. A power of one hundred and fifty on a three-inch telescope will show Mars's polar snow caps. With a power of two hundred and fifty or three hundred, the principal lands and seas may be identified in good weather, and when the planet is favorably situated in his orbit. Vast masses of clouds are sometimes seen obscuring the details of the disk, and hiding whole continents, as the continents of the earth would be hidden, during long-continued and wide-spread rains, from an observer on Mars. The remarkable ruddy color of Mars has been referred by some to the color of his soil, as if it were like the red sand of northern New Jersey. Others have thought that Martial vegetation may be red instead of green. Still others have supposed the color to be due to the density of the planet's atmosphere.

The asteroids, or small planets, of which over two hundred have been discovered, are too minute to be of much interest to the amateur telescopist, some of them being only a few miles in diameter. The huge planets Uranus and Neptune, which stand like sentinels on the frontiers of the solar system, and require more than a man's lifetime to make a single revolution around the sun, are so far away that the most powerful telescopes in existence have not served to clearly reveal their giant features, and the glasses of amateurs can do no more than barely distinguish them from fixed stars.—N. Y. Sun.

"Vell, dot settles Yon Doe!"

Such was the triumphant remark of Yark Von Weider last evening as the reporter hove in sight.

"Is John Doe finally done for?" asked the man of the pencil.

Yark was rolling up the awning in front of his brewery—the New Amsterdam, as every one knows—but seeing that the reporter appeared interested he let it down again, and, bracing his back against a post, prepared to give a sketch of the business.

"You know I often heard of dot feller, dot he was always in de gourts, but I don't knowed him by sight. He make himself mine brewery his headquarters, but I didn't knowed he was Yon Doe. He schstays mit me like dot boy schstands on der purning decks. He talked me to schleep mudder effery night. He trinks mine beer, but he don't never got no money."

"Well, but what happened him, Yark—what settled him?"

"Vell, you see, when he don't got some money to live on he got arrested last night on a scharge of vacancy."

"Of what?"

"Scharge of vacancy, on account dot he got inwisible means of subbort. Vell, ven der yudge hear der policeman and all der vitnesses stake der case, he ind it was a fact. So der yudge gif him dwenty-four hours to disappear vor sendence. Dot settles Yon Doe!"—Virginia City (Nev.) Enterprise.

WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it: there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother, and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Sold everywhere. 25 cents a bottle.

Coughs.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are used with advantage to alleviate COUGHS, SORE THROAT, HOARSENESS and BRONCHIAL AFFECTIONS. For thirty years these Troches have been in use, with annually increasing favor. They are not new and untried, but, having been tested by wide and constant use for nearly an entire generation, they have attained well-merited rank among the few staple remedies of the age.

THE THROAT.—"Brown's Bronchial Troches" act directly on the organs of the voice. They have an extraordinary effect in all disorders of the Throat and Larynx, restoring a healthy tone when relaxed, either from cold or over-exertion of the voice, and produce a clear and distinct enunciation. Speakers and Singers find the Troches useful.

A COUGH, COLD, CATARRH or Sore Throat requires immediate attention, as neglect oftentimes results in some incurable Lung Disease. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" will almost invariably give relief. Imitations are offered for sale, many of which are injurious. The genuine "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are sold only in boxes.

BRIEFLETS.

—Moist last night.

—The cold water workers meet to-night.

—The County Committee on Claims put in more work to-day.

—The Circuit Court is still busy with the case of Black vs Goldthorpe.

—Regular meeting of the Ancient Order of United Workmen this evening.

—The criminal calendar of the Circuit Court is to be called on next Monday.

—The Rock River Encampment I. O. O. F., have a dance at Apollo hall to-night.

—The new depot at Albany is being pushed rapidly to completion. In the meantime friend Samuels, sent from here as the agent, has a freight car fitted up as an office.

—The new station at Albany on the C. M. & St. Paul Railway, starts out well, shipments of stock, grain and merchandise are coming in freely, and with three trains a day, passengers are well accommodated.

—Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Bump entertained about sixty of their friends last evening at their elegant house in the First ward. The guests were most hospitably cared for, and the evening hours were filled with enjoyment. It was one of the pleasantest affairs of the kind which has marked the social record.

—R. P. Bleasdale, one of Rock county's old settlers, died, last night, at his home in the town of Harmony. He has been an invalid for some time, and had reached the age of 51 years. He was a native of England, and settled in the town of Janesville in 1845. During his long residence here he has won many friends, and won the respect of all; and while his death does not come as a surprise, yet the sorrow and sympathy felt will be no less surely called forth among all who knew him. The funeral services are to be held at the residence, next Sunday, at 11 o'clock, and the remains will be brought to this city for interment.

—The Parlor Billiard hall in Smith's block opposite the Myers house, has added to its attraction by opening an oyster department and business men's lunch rooms. The rooms are fitted up in a very neat and cosy manner, and are so arranged that a party can be by themselves, if they so desire. Oysters are served in all forms, and business men desiring a lunch at any time can get one, and can get as good a cup of coffee as ever served. These conveniences will be appreciated by the public, added as they are to a roomy clean billiard hall, with five tables and all the appointments of a first-class place. The management is such that the very best class of trade is drawn there, and by the enterprise shown in all the details of the business, it is evident that this trade will be kept, and steadily increased.

When you visit New York city do not fail to try the Grand Central Hotel, 667 Broadway. It is now the best $3.00 a day house in the city. It is under the management of the same parties who run the famous Manhattan Beach Hotel.

THE WEATHER.

REPORTED BY PRENTICE & EVENSON, DRUGGISTS.

The thermometer at 6 o'clock last night stood at 48 degrees above zero; at 1 o'clock A. M. to-day, at 48 degrees above; at 7 o'clock A. M. at 56 degrees above, and at 1 o'clock P. M. at 43 degrees above. Cloudy.

MRS. J. B. WILSON, Tiffin, Ohio, says: —I have worn an Improved Excelsior Kidney Pad, and received more relief from all remedies I have ever tried. I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers. —See Adv.

OFFICERS OF THE GUARDS.

Last evening the Janesville Guards held their annual meeting and the election of officers resulted:

President—O. H. Fethers,
Vice President—J. B. Doe, Jr.
Secretary—G. Woodruff.
Financial Secretary—W. A. Hand.
Treasurer—H. J. Lawrence.
Chaplain—T. W. MacLean.
Surgeon—J. B. Whiting, M. D.
Judge Advocate—Thomas S. Nolan.

FRIGHTFULLY HURT.

Last evening Dr. Palmer was called to Orfordville to attend to the injuries received by John Clark, who was the victim of as bad a runaway as often goes on record. In coming home from Brodhead, he fell between the wheel and body, and was in this position for two miles, the wheel grinding away until it wore through the flesh on one side, and caused other serious injuries, mostly internal. It was two hours afterward before he was found, lying in an insensible condition, and it seems now that he cannot survive, although there is a possibility of his living.

PERSONAL.

—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Kienow rejoice. It's a bouncing boy.

—Mrs. Wm. P. Dennis, of Rockford, is in the city visiting her brother, Mr. J. A. Leland, and family.

—Rev. F. L. Chapell expects to arrive home from the East in time to officiate as usual at the Baptist church Sunday.

—Capt. John Neal left to-day for New York, to resume his life on the ocean wave, between there and the West Indies. May the storms deal lightly with him is is the wish of all.

—Last evening J. J. R. Pease received a telegram stating that his son, who is with Capt. Ruger, in New Mexico, was lying very ill indeed in the camp there. He has accordingly gone thither, and friends here will wait anxiously for further news.

HUGE REPTILES.

The Huge Reptiles that once Inhabited the Earth.

The Brooklyn (N. Y.) Union and Argus gives the following abstract of a lecture on geology recently delivered in that city by Prof. L. H. Fairchild:

The lecturer said: We have for our consideration this evening an age in the earth's history as well marked as any other. So far as science is able to shed light upon the past, the age stands out as prominently as any other with which geology has to deal. In this old age, an age immediately succeeding the coal period of which I spoke last week, reptiles ruled the earth; indeed, were the tyrants of the earth. And huge monsters they were, some as large as the whale. The largest living reptile is the crocodile, with a femur (thigh bone) six inches long and an inch and a half in diameter. What size do you suppose the femur was of the largest animal that lived in the Reptilian Age? Professor Newberry, of New York, has a plaster cast, and this is not entire, as a portion of the socket of the original is wanting, which shows one of these animals to have had a femur six feet two inches long, and two feet in diameter at one end and eighteen inches at the other. Bones bear such a relation to each other, there is such a correlation between the parts of skeletons, that, give a scientist a single bone or tooth and he is able to reconstruct the entire skeleton. Thus reconstructing this animal it must have stood thirty or forty feet high, and if it had a tail, as lizards have, must have been 100 feet long. It is the largest land animal known, though it may be eclipsed by future discoveries. The great bulk of our whale is supported by the buoyant power of the water. How then could such a huge animal as that just described have existed on the land? Without doubt the flesh was not so heavy, while the bones were more porous. There were many other animals in the age, but none so large. We can form some estimate of the number of animals that existed in the Reptilian Age by comparing their remains with the number of animals that to-day die and are imbedded in the mud. Probably no more than one out of 10,000 or 100,000 animals that die to-day are thus preserved. Therefore we conclude that an age that left such an abundance of remains must have had numerous animals.

A word as to the growth of our continent during this age. You will remember that North America was at first V shaped; that by successive fallings and risings and the exposure of beds of sand and mud along its borders it gradually grew, until at the end of the carboniferous age it extended to the south of our coal fields. So far the rock making had all gone on to the eastward, but now in the Reptilian Age we find the scene of continental growth shifting to the west, and the Sierra Nevada, Wasatch and Henry Mountains and some others are formed, but not the Rocky Mountains, which are of a later date, and at its end we find the continent nearly completed —all but a little strip along the coast of the Southern States and Mexico and the western coast of America. There are some formations connected with this period that have an interest for us. You know the houses of Brooklyn and New York are built of brown stone. This stone is a rock of the Reptilian Age, for during that age the valley of the Connecticut was an arm of the sea, and seems to have been gradually sinking, the debris washed down from the neighboring hills being washed into it, until to-day we have as a result a bed of stone hundreds of feet thick, composed of hardened, triturated, pulverized rock. Iron enters into the composition of the stone, but in an oxydized state, which gives the stone the color for which it is so highly prized, and the quality of durability. There is another strip of similar rock, beginning at the Palisades and extending southwest through New Jersey into Pennsylvania, and then running to the westward and far into the State of Virginia. This rock belongs to the Triassic period of the age, the other periods being the Jurassic and Cretacious. There is no doubt that the long strip of rock last described also marks the position of an ancient valley to which the sea had free access. In this brown stone we find the remains of reptiles, and the first traces discovered in America were found at the Portland quarries, in Connecticut. A prominent plant of the Reptilian Age was similar to what we call the sago palm, though it is not a palm. It is a very interesting plant, because it combines the peculiarities of three tree families, having the habits of the palm, but having its great fronds rolled at their extremities as in the fern, and having the texture of the trunk similar to the structure of the conefer or pine. It is what is known as the synthetic type, and the cycad, as it is called, was the characteristic plant of the Reptilian Age.

The Age of Reptiles could very truly be called the Age of Mollusks, but we designate it by the former title because the reptile represented the highest type of animal life then existing. The bivalves were very different from any living representatives, one for instance being conical in form and having a cap at the top. Some of the univalves were a foot in diameter. The largest mollusks in all ages have been the cephalopods, or devil-fishes, and in the Reptilian Age they were wonderful creatures. Their shells were of almost all conceivable shapes, coiled, spiral and twisted. The diameter of our pearly nautilus is six inches, but these old ancestors sometimes attained a diameter of three feet. Then we have a few fishes in this age—the first appearance of the modern fish with bony skeleton and membranous scales. The lecturer here used the lantern to show the reptiles of the age. First he showed the so-called "bird" tracks of the Connecticut Valley, one impression being twenty inches long. Another track showed fat glove-like tracks in an European slab, attention being directed to mud cracks in the stone. The icthyosaurus, a swimming reptile, having a long pointed head, and long, slender tail, with flippers as paddles—a water-breathing lizard, thirty feet long, was next described. The next view was of a skull of a carniverous land lizard. A view of the pterodactylus, or flying lizard, having a web similar to that of the bat, extending from the little finger of the forearm to the ribs, was thrown on the screen. Another lizard, the masosaurus, was described as having been 100 feet long. An animal with a serpent's head, a swan-like neck and a short tail was named the plesiosaurus. Then there was a true crocodile, similar to that of the Ghanges. An animal, the megalosaurus, about the size of the ox, with powerful forelegs and a crest upon the shoulders, was projected upon the screen, and from its build must have been tyrant of the age, the lion of the period. Then there was a bird with sharp claws and a feather for every joint of its long tail. Numerous other views were shown, the lecturer concluding with a picture of the Portland quarry.

A Happy Restoration.

I can truly say that I owe my present existence and happy restoration to the hopes and joys of life, to the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and I say to every one suffering from any manner of kidney, liver or urinary trouble, "Use this remedy and recover."
